Jeffrey R. Holland speaks at the Devotional on Elder Holland's remarks dealt with opposition.

Elder Holland says full of opposition

By ERIN MARTIN
erin@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Jeffrey R. Holland told listeners Wednesday's Devotional not to give opposition to end, even after a revelation.

Elder Holland said opposition often brings greater enlightened decisions when made.

"Revelation comes) after moments of inspiration and conviction have brought peace and an assurance we know we would never lose."

But one must not think that one is defeated with a first, strong attempt. The fight goes on.

"The adversary is real and cannot be overcome for a season of such importance and significance. His everlasting influence is powerful and lasting — a force to be reckoned with and a power to be fought, but nevertheless overthrown," Elder Holland said.

"Don't panic and retreat. Don't lose your confidence. Don't forget how you once felt. Don't distrust the experience you had."

—Elder Jeffrey R. Holland, Quorum of the Twelve Apostles

Elder Holland said in the process of revelation and making important decisions, fear almost always plays a destructive, sometimes paralyzing role.

"It would not have been better (for the Israelites) to stay and serve the Egyptians, and it is not better to remain outside the church, nor to reject a mission call, nor to put off marriage and so on and so on forever," he said.

Faith will be tested while fighting through self-doubts and second thoughts, but at those times one must resist the temptation to panic and give up, Elder Holland said.

Along with the illuminating revelation that points one toward a righteous purpose or duty, God will provide the means and power to achieve that purpose, he said.

"That is true of joining the church, or getting an education, or going on a mission, or getting married, or any one of a hundred other worthy tasks in life," he said. "God's grace is sufficient."

Elder Holland said not to fear, to keep confidence and to know the Lord will help through adversity.

No late night for Congress

By HILLARY GUBLER

As the legislature wraps up today, senators and representatives will spend many hours passing final legislation inside the capitol. However, they won't be spending as much time on the floor as they did last year.

Legislators predict they will leave the floor as early as 6 tonight instead of the usual midnight.

In past years, legislatures have been further behind and more frantic during the last week because high-stress legislation of appropriations, uniform school funds and bond bills are voted on the last day in the closing minutes.

Legislators said adjourning early may be due to the good management of Speaker of the House Martin R. Stephens, R-Farr West.

"He had the foresight to hear the controversial bills last week," said Sen. Pete Suazo, D-Salt Lake.

Another reason for the early adjournment may be the number of bills heard in this session. This year, there are only 684 numbered bills compared to last year's 754.

"It is the lowest number of bills in the past 10 years," said Asst. House Majority Whip Greg Curtis, R-Sandy.

Sen. John L. Valentine, R-Orem, said the lower number of bills is due to the turnover ratio in both the house and senate.

Legislators are also taking a more aggressive stance because they have been asked to focus on three priority bills, so they have been more selective, Valentine said.

Since they are ahead of schedule, legislators are taking more breaks than last year. Historically, legislators push on through 3- to 4-hour blocks without taking breaks, but this year there are more brief saunters that can last anywhere from 15 to 45 minutes.

Some legislators call these saunters "bladder breaks," Suazo said.

Valentine said besides stretching, breaks are a time to set up meetings for a caucus and catch up on bills with the other legislative body.

KBYU TV's 4:30 newscast will originate from the Utah State Capitol today, with a special report on the final day of the 1999 legislative session, on Channel 11.

The Utah Legislature opens a new session Jan. 18. The number of bills this year is the lowest it has been in 10 years, allowing Congress to adjourn early tonight.

Cougars squash Horned Frogs

Viva Las Vegas!

It's a saying that's everywhere, but no one is saying it louder than the BYU men's basketball team, which won in the first round of the WAC Tournament over Texas Christian University on Tuesday.

As the underdogs going into the afternoon game at the Thomas & Mack Center, the Cougar men were as hot as they've been all season in their 90-74 win over the Horned Frogs.

Like last week's victory over UTEP, Tuesday's win resulted from the sharp-shooting Cougar offense. Shooting an impressive 59 percent from long range in the first half, the Cougars established a lead that was difficult for the Horned Frogs to overcome.

"I knew that to have any chance we would need to come out and make baskets," said BYU head coach Steve Cleveland. "

We came out and shot the ball extremely well in the first half."

However, not everyone saw the victory only as a result of the Cougars' accuracy.

"They out-coached us. They outplayed us. They out-everythinged us," said TCU head coach Billy Tubbs. "They got control of the game, and we were always scrambling to make up for it."

The Cougars were led by a career-high 24 points from sophomore guard Nathan Cooper. With 17 at the half, Cooper was hot from inside and out, knocking down three shots from outside the arc.

"We decided we were going to come out loose and have fun," Cooper said.

Once the Cougars got going, they were difficult to stop.

After a string of eight-point runs, BYU led by as much as 15 at one point in the first half, eventually carrying a 48-41 lead to the locker room.

The Horned Frogs, led by senior All-WAC player Lee Nailon, came out feisty in the second half, narrowing the gap to two with 15:40 left to play.

That would be as close as TCU would get, after both Tubbs and Nailon received technical fouls within 20 seconds of each other. The fouls resulted in a 9-0 run by the Cougars, from the charity stripe.

BYU's Silester Rivers is surrounded by four TCU Horned Frogs en route to the hoop in the Cougars' 90-74 win in the first round of the WAC tournament Tuesday. For the second game in a row, the Cougars used efficient long-range shooting to help them to a win. Up next for the Cougars is Utah, which is ranked 8th in the nation and was undefeated in the WAC.

Adam Whitten/Daily Universe

"It was a turning point in the game," Cleveland said. "I feel really comfortable when our guys are on the line."

In addition to Cooper's offensive performance, WAC Freshman of the Year Mark Bigelow dumped in 20 points and Michael Vranes finished with 19, including a five-of-seven outing from three-point range. Mekeli Wesley finished with 17 points.

The win advances the team to round two, where they will face Utah for the third time this year.

Tip-off is Thursday at 3:30 p.m.

Baby in foster home, mom accused of abuse

Police charged a Pleasant Grove woman Tuesday with beating her 2-year-old daughter unconscious and then placing the child face-down in the bathtub.

At about 10:30 p.m. Friday night, Maxine Na-oupu's daughter was found face-down in the bathtub by the family's other children.

They pulled the child out of the water and called the police, said Lt. Mike Blackhurst of the Pleasant Grove Police Department.

Blackhurst said the 2-year-old child was released from Primary Children's Medical Center to a foster home in Salt Lake City on Tuesday.

Blackhurst said Na-oupu's husband was out of town when the incident occurred.

Laray Brown, associate director of the Division of Child and Family Services for Utah, Juab, Wasatch and Millard counties said she could not release details of the case, but said removing a child from any home can be traumatic.

"You have to weigh that factor against the risk involved," Brown said.

She said it is best to keep the child in some kind of family setting if at all possible.

Many times grandparents or other relatives are given custody of the child Brown said.

Before a child is removed from the home a complete investigation is conducted to determine the risk involved in keeping a child at home, Brown said. If the child is removed from the home, a shelter hearing is held in juvenile court.

The hearing is conducted within 72 hours to determine if the child will remain in state custody or be released to the parents or other family members. Parents are allowed to have legal counsel at the hearing, Brown said.

Bush to further explore candidacy

AUSTIN, Texas — Texas Gov. George W. Bush, eldest son of the former president, announced Tuesday he will form a presidential exploratory committee to raise money and measure support for a White House bid of his own in 2000.

Bush, 52, stopped short of formally entering the presidential race. But he has begun assembling a fund-raising team and has been consulting policy advisers for weeks.

"Those of you who cover me every day know I don't make this decision lightly. I've carefully considered its ramifications," Bush said Tuesday.

"I've been encouraged by the outpouring of support from fellow elected officials and party leaders all across our country many of whom, as you know, have made the trip to Austin, Texas."

In an interview Monday, Bush said forming a presidential exploratory committee would allow him to assess the national political mood. "It'll be interesting to see what the different politics are around the country," he said.

Army violence escalates in Kosovo

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — Yugoslav forces pounded southern villages with tank and mortar fire Tuesday, targeting ethnic Albanian refugees camped in the rocky, snow-dusted hills along the border between the Kosovo province and Macedonia.

Heavy weapons, armored personnel carriers and trucks loaded with Serb police and Yugoslav army troops lined nine miles of border road, more evidence of President Slobodan Milosevic's military buildup in defiance of NATO airstrike warnings.

In some of the heaviest fighting since U.S. peace talks were suspended last week, border attacks in recent days have driven about 5,000 people from their villages. Those with passports have fled into Macedonia.

Western observers fear the sporadic violence could explode into a resumption of full-fledged war before peace negotiators meet again on March 15.

"It's an example of how volatile the situation is," said Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Vollebaek, who chairs the Operation for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which monitors fighting in Kosovo.

Olympic gun ban passes House

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah lawmakers Tuesday passed and sent to the governor a bill banning concealed weapons at 2002 Winter Olympic venues, in a state where more than 20,000 civilians are licensed to pack heat.

Only biathletes will be able to carry guns in the venues under the legislation passed earlier by the Utah Senate and Tuesday by the House.

A spokeswoman said Republican Gov. Mike Leavitt plans to sign the bill into law.

The bill would prohibit concealed weapons permit holders from taking their guns into Olympic venues over a nine-week period beginning two weeks before the Games and ending with the closing ceremonies of the Paralympic Games.

The bill would also allow homeowners and church leaders to forbid guns in their homes or places of worship. Leavitt had expressed support for a ban on concealed weapons in schools, churches and private residences.

Rwandan rebels mutilate 8 tourists

KAMPALA, Uganda — Eight tourists tracking rare mountain gorillas were killed and six others were rescued after being kidnapped by Rwandan rebels. An American survivor said Tuesday that the rebels brutally hacked some victims to death with machetes.

In Washington, State Department spokesman James Foley said two Americans were murdered as they were being marched away by their captors. The remaining six victims were killed the same way, he said.

Foley said the victims will not be identified until their relatives are notified. The six released hostages were returned to Kampala, he said.

Mark Ross, a tour operator and pilot who was born in Arkansas but has spent years in Africa, told reporters the rebels rounded up tourists from several jungle camps in southwestern Uganda.

Federal money aids Provo organizations

A Provo City committee recommended allocating $2.1 million in federal grants to several community projects and non-profit organizations.

The Boys and Girls Club of Utah County, the Food and Care Coalition, and the Center for Women and Children are just a few of the organizations that will receive funding from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's Community Development Block Grant Program during the fiscal year 1999-2000.

The program is designed to help low and moderate-income communities.

In addition to the $2.1 million, the city will receive $540,000 from existing loan programs as well as another $254,874 from canceled or existing projects.

The total amount the city will spend is over $2.8 million.

In October 1998, 17 applications were filed by community social service organizations.

At that time, an advisory committee, consisting of Provo neighborhood chairs, was created to begin reviewing the applications. All but one request was recommended by the committee to the City Council to receive funding. The Crisis Line was rejected funding because of sufficient funds remaining from fiscal year 1998-1999.

Elsie McClellan, chair of the committee, said she was pleased to be involved with the project.

Most of the programs that turned in applications were recommended by the committee to receive partial funding. The Family Support and Treatment Organization, Provo City Parks and Development, and the Recreation for All handicapped program, however, were recommended to receive the full amount of their requests.

Another public hearing to discuss the block grant funds will be at the City Council meeting March 16.

Suspect to undergo mental test

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A woman accused of slaying an AT&T employee during a shooting spree at the Triad Center appeared in court for a roll-call hearing Tuesday.

De-Kieu "Lisa" Duy, 24, is charged with capital murder in the Jan. 14 shooting.

Third District Court Judge Stephen Henriod ordered her to undergo psychiatric evaluations before her next appearance in court, which he scheduled for April 1.

Her legal defender, Paul Quinlan, has said Duy has auditory and visual hallucinations. He described her as "one of the most paranoid-schizophrenic people I've ever met."

On Tuesday, Quinlan said he doubted the time-consuming psychiatric evaluations would be completed by April 1.

gh this is a $50 increase ear, some teachers say it still will not cover the cost of their classrooms.

"Funding will probably always be inadequate because there will always be students in need," said Patti Harrington, assistant superintendent for the Provo School District.

Harrington sees the increase as beneficial. She said teachers want something for their classrooms and they go out and buy it, which turns into extra expenses.

At Joaquin Elementary in Provo many teachers spend $800 to $900 of their own salary on supplies each year, Principal Don Dowdle said.

"I appreciate the increase and hope it can continue to make a dent in the out-of-pocket spending," Dowdle said. He said his wife, a teacher in the Alpine School District, spends $1200 to $1500 a year on her classroom.

But the increase was too low for Ginny Smith, a first grade teacher at Edgemont Elementary School. She said the basic materials are not enough to effectively teach students anymore.

"We are moving on in technology, but the money we get is not allowing us to keep up with it," Smith said.

Smith argued although learning takes place in the mind, teachers need the means to help internalize this learning.

"They need quality products, and they can tell the difference," Smith said.

Smith said teachers are pulled in different directions.

Teachers want to be effective educators, but they also need that money to support their families, Smith said.

Teachers who are the sole supporters of their families don't make a large income as it is, but then they end up spending a large chunk of their paychecks on their classrooms, Smith said.

While Smith realizes all the money in the state cannot go towards education, she said it is a worthy cause.

"Yes, other things are important but there is no better investment than our children," Smith said.

working this for four years now, we ought to be able to get it done,'" Sen. John Valentine, R-Orem, recounted.

The Quality Growth Act is regarded by Leavitt and sponsors in the House, where it was approved last week, as a showpiece of the 1999 Utah session that will end today.

It has barely survived attacks from real estate agents, home builders and powerful water districts.

The construction industry, home builders and realtors already elbowed their way on a Quality Growth Commission, a state board that will help shape anti-sprawl policies. But they reportedly wanted even more of the board's 13 seats.

Valentine said the make-up of the board will not change, leaving it with six seats for local politicians, two for state agencies, three for the development industry and two that could go to conservation groups.

The most hostile of Senate amendments was authored by Sen. Mike Dmitrich, D-Price. Dmitrich wanted to ax a major source of revenue for a $5 million land-conservation fund – the proceeds of energy-conservation savings at state agencies.

The Legislature is allocating $3 million in general fund money to the land fund this year, but the energy-savings windfall is expected to reach millions within several years, eclipsing the contribution from tax dollars. The fund is expected to rapidly build up to $5 million a year.

The House on Monday approved the tax option, which allows voters to raise the sales tax by an eighth of a cent for conservation easements. But Valentine said the Senate was unlikely to go along with that legislation.

d not allow any student housing to be converted to condominiums. Associate City planner Pat Hanson said the Council was concerned that the many different owners of the condominiums could not sufficiently enforce the student occupancy standards included in the ordinance.

The amendment has a provision requiring owners to enforce the standards by proving to the city that 90 percent of the people living in their condominiums are UVSC students, Hanson said.

UVSC Assistant Vice President for College Relations Val Peterson said because UVSC is a commuter school, students must rely on the local economy to find a place to live.

Rebecca Ralph, coordinator of the new UVSC off-campus housing service, said out-of state enrollment is growing and more local students want to move away from home to complete the college experience.

Ralph mediates relations between UVSC certified apartment complexes and students. She thinks any student housing built by UVSC will fill up fast.

"Students are looking for something that's close – most of our students can't walk to school and with only a few parking spaces, more want to be able to walk to campus."

s caused three of the four e-related fatalities. The y was caused by a lack of snowmobile experience and preparation for the cold weather.

In the fourth fatality, a husband and wife with no snowmobiling experience were caught in bad weather while snowmobiling in Daniel's Canyon.

Dressed only in jeans, a shirt and a jacket, the wife died of hypothermia. The husband also suffered from hypothermia but survived.

Campbell said it is important for snowmobilers to dress appropriately because the weather can change so quickly.

On Saturday, Kim Jenkins and Jesse Patterson, both 15 and from Alpine, fell 75 feet into the bottom of a dam while snowmobiling in Silver Lake Flats in the Uinta National Forrest.

Jenkins said she drove full speed up a hill, which unbeknownst to her was the side of a snow-covered, dried-up dam.

When she and passenger Patterson reached the top of the "hill," the snowmobile flew through the air and dropped 75 feet to the bottom of the dam.

"My uncle almost did the same thing, but he let off the throttle in time and was able to turn before going over the other side of the dam," Jenkins said.

Both teens were brought to Columbia Timpanogos Regional Hospital and released later that day with minor injuries.

Jenkins said she thinks the hill should be marked to warn riders that it is a dam.

"We try to sign places like that," Campbell said. "In some aspects it is difficult because of the depth of the snow."

Campbell said the Division of Parks and Recreation has maps that show the trail heads. The maps are available for snowmobilers to purchase, but they are expensive, she said.

World Fest showcases cultures

By MICHELLE COXEY
coxey@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Provo Mayor Lewis Billings read a proclamation to students and residents Tuesday, declaring March as "International Month" in Provo.

Billings said he wants to foster increased understanding of different cultures in preparation for the 2002 Winter Olympics.

"With the Olympics coming, I think we as a community need to begin thinking more than ever before about hosting the world," Billings said. "Our attitude is, the world is welcome always, not just in 2002."

Billings' speech marked the beginning of World Fest '99, which is sponsored by BYU International Services.

Though International Services has sponsored World Fest for several years, this year's activities will also target Provo residents.

Enoc Flores, director of International Services, said the purpose of World Fest is to provide cultural awareness for the community.

"We want to start opening eyes to international cultures in Provo," Flores said.

Throughout the week, international BYU students will host activities to inform other students about their cultures.

A Chinese dragon led a parade of students through campus after the Devotional on Tuesday to kick off the week's activities.

Cultural booths representing 42 different countries will also be on display this week in the Garden Court of the Wilkinson Student Center.

Kriti Agarwal, 21, a junior from India, majoring in business management, is working at the India booth.

Agarwal said events like World Fest provide opportunities for international students to be heard and for all students to learn.

"I am very happy with the way BYU has come up with this entire idea of bringing different countries together," Agarwal said.

All World Fest events are open to the public. Tickets can be purchased at the door at each event or by calling 378-2695.

Azusa Matsukawa, 24, a senior from Kobe, Japan, majoring in international relations, presents her nation's culture at a booth in the Wilkinson Student Center Garden Court. The booth is part of this week's World Fest activities designed to "internationalize" BYU students.

Y students run to help cure cancer

By ALLISON BRINKERHOFF and STEPHANIE CARN

Two BYU students are running a race against cancer in the Boston Marathon in April.

Stephanie Griffin, 20, a junior from Zionsville, Penn., majoring in dietetics, qualified for the marathon in the fall of 1997. Her friend Greg Hart, 24, a senior from Heber City, majoring in chemistry, will join her in her crusade.

During the latter part of 1995, Griffin's mother was diagnosed with breast cancer. She had both radiation and chemotherapy treatments and is now in remission.

The two are earning money for the American Cancer Society by soliciting donations from various companies around the region.

"We are just sending out letters to companies this week," Griffin said. "Every company that has donated more than $200 will get to put a small emblem on the T-shirts that Greg and I are making. This way we will be advertising their company along with the cause."

Griffin said when she told her mother about her mission, she was flattered by Griffin's choice and dedication to a great cause. She was thrilled that her daughter was helping out the American Cancer Society.

Tara Avena, the area program director of the American Cancer Society, said she thinks what Griffin and Hart are doing is great.

"(This) is what the American Cancer Society is about. It's a community effort. It's about people in the community helping out and trying to make a difference," Avena said.

Griffin and Hart welcome donations from any company, organization or private party.

For more information about the American Cancer Society, contact the Provo branch at 899 N. Freedom Blvd., Provo, Utah 84604.

Cougars compete in plant meet

By SARAH HARTSFIELD

A team of undergraduate and graduate students that attended a Society for Range Management meeting in Omaha, Neb., last weekend performed well in several prestigious competitions, said Bruce Roundy, Chair of the Department of Botany and Range Science.

Rachel Fugal had the highest individual score in the range plant identification contest. Fugal also had the highest combined score in the range plant identification contest and the undergraduate range management exam.

Because of her high scores, Fugal won two trips to Washington, D.C. She will meet the heads of land management agencies such as the Natural Resource Conservation Service and the Bureau of Land Management.

Marla Judy placed fourth in the combined contest and exam, winning a $500 prize.

The Range Plant Identification Team placed third in their plant identification contest. The contest required the team to identify up to 200 different range plants, sometimes with only small sections of the plant visible.

The team was coached by Val Jo Anderson, an assistant professor of range science. Graduate students Amy Sullivan and Robert Cox participated as assistant coaches.

Cox, 26, from Orem, is a graduate student in botany. He said placing in this competition is a big honor for BYU.

Six BYU students also participated in the undergraduate impromptu public speaking competition. Six of the eight papers presented at the meeting were given by BYU students.

Emily Jordan, 23, from Spokane, Wash., majoring in conservation biology, presented a paper on the "Let it burn" policy, which concerns the management of fire in a wilderness. Jordan also placed sixth in the plant identification contest.

the lecture series is part of f events to let the public ut the research being done k of Abraham. FARMS is planning to hold a scholarly conference on the subject in October.

"The lecture series provides a more popular format to discuss some research that has been going on," he said.

Gee said a considerable amount of research on the Book of Abraham has not been available to the public.

"The way we look at the Book of Abraham is different now than how we looked at it 10 years ago — and many people are looking at it the way we did 30 years ago," he said.

A lot of the new research changes the way one looks at the Book of Abraham, Gee said.

A publication series on the research will be available to help people better understand the research being done on the Book of Abraham, he said. The publication series is in the planning stages.

Brent Hall, the assistant executive director of FARMS, said it is a blessing to have this lecture series with such great scholars.

"The Book of Abraham is one of the most important pieces of religious literature there is, and it is one of the most seldom lectured about or studied," he said.

Michael Rhodes, professor of ancient scripture, agreed that the lectures given by expert scholars will be interesting for the audience.

"I think most people have an interest in Egypt because of the tremendous cultural and archeological accomplishments of the ancient Egyptians," he said.

Rhodes said the lecture series will help show how research and gospel beliefs relate.

"There is always an interest in finding things that are supportive of what we already understand from a gospel standpoint," he said.

Locals dance at championships

By JENI DEERY
jeni@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

BYU will host the National DanceSport Championships this week with local and national dancers competing in the Marriott Center.

About 2,000 competitors, with skills ranging from amateur to professional, will compete in various ballroom dance categories Thursday through Saturday.

BYU is in its fourth year of a 10-year contract to host the event.

According to Claudia Hill, a member of the BYU dance faculty, one reason BYU hosts national championships is that 80 percent of the competitors are from Utah and Idaho.

Hill also said Provo draws a large number of spectators. Last year the contest drew more than 10,000 people and an even larger crowd is expected this week, she said.

Linda Wakefield, a member of the BYU dance faculty and a contest judge, said the competition receives a lot of support in Utah.

"There is a lot of interest in the community. Many alumni have gone on and started their own programs," Wakefield said. "They are teaching in elementary schools, middle schools and high schools. There's just a lot of support in the area."

Participants competing for national titles include dancers ages 4 and up. There will also be competitions among students from BYU dance classes and other events that anyone can enter.

The U.S. titles will be given in youth, junior and pre-teen categories along with cabaret, professional standard and professional "rising star" competition.

Defending their U.S. National Professional Standard Champion title, Jonathan Wilkins, 29, and Katushka Demidova, 21, will return from New York City, where they live and practice in a studio 10 hours a day.

Provo High School students Leah Kemeny and John Graham will be defending their title as U.S. Junior American-style Champions. The couple is involved with BYU's Youth Ballroom Dance Program.

Other Utahns defending their title are two-time U.S. National Youth Ten-dance champions Jonathan Gulledge and Ashly Delgrosso.

The ballroom-style competition will include dances such as international latin, international standard ballroom, American-style cabaret and country western. Dance rhythms such as the cha-cha, tango, waltz, fox trot and swing will be displayed.

Ballroom dance is now called dancesport. In 1993 the name was changed when it became a provisional sport in the Olympics, Hill said.

The national championships will draw 15 nationally certified judges from around the country, according to Hill.

Wakefield was chosen as a judge because she is a member of the National Dance Council of America and has taken exams to become a world-class judge.

"I just happened to be picked for this one," she said.

The competition is judged on a skating system, with 13-15 judges on the floor for the youth title event and fewer judges for other events. The competition is judged by a process of elimination, with preliminary, semi-final and final rounds, according to Wakefield.

"We eliminate 12 couples per round and just keep tearing it down," she said.

Michelle Sheets, 19, a freshman from Salt Lake City with an open major, said she is planning to watch the competition.

"I think it's amazing. It's hard enough to dance on your own. It's amazing that they can get their movement and footwork together so perfectly," Sheets said. "It's so cool. I love it."

Tickets for the National DanceSport hampionships may be purchased by calling the Marriott Center ticket office at 378-BYU1. Student tickets for Thursday and Friday cost $6 and general admission tickets are $10-$14. Tables are also available for $30 a person. Student tickets for Saturday cost $8 and general admission is $12-$18. The tickets are valid for all sessions for the day purchased.

Sessions of the U.S. National DanceSport Championships begin at 9 a.m. in the Marriott Center. Finals will be at the following times:

Thursday

5:45 p.m. Junior Newcomer American Championship (Samba, Waltz)
5:50 p.m. Pre-Championship Latin Championship (Cha-Cha, Paso Doble, Samba)

The CD, the best of college and indie music, offers music from college and independent bands from across the nation.

trombone and saxophone are the dominant instruments, and manage to work together with the lead vocalist (a Barenaked Ladies sound-alike) so well they almost converted me to a rude girl.

Music Review

Songs such as Divespire's "Floodlight" and New Haven's "Gravel Pit" are sure to impress alternative fans. I wouldn't go as far as to compare either of these bands to Pearl Jam or R.E.M., but they have mastered a different approach to combining electric guitars with bass. If you're imagining something along the lines of a cross between older-generation Aerosmith and Smashing Pumpkins, and you'll like what you hear.

"A Harlequin Romance" is by far my favorite piece on the entire CD. Despite the slightly risque lyrics (I wouldn't let a 10-year-old listen to this song), the members of the Jay Hodgson Group do know how to work a piano and cellos together to tell how we feel when we cross paths with an ex.

Two-person band Zero Degrees Kelvin weaves harmony with acoustic guitar to create the folkish piece titled "Touch Me Now." As another favorite of mine, the two women combine their voices in this song and allow the listener to journey with them to a peaceful, sort of milk-and-honey paradise.

The vocalists could be a little more unified, but I wouldn't be at all surprised if someone someday labels this band the next Indigo Girls.

After listening to the first volume this website has produced, I'm not at all hesitant to declare a tremendous plethora of musical talent is unfolding among college-age bands all over our nation.

I admit, a few songs on this volume were slightly irritating, but perhaps that is because of my dislike for synthesized music.

Those few songs I relinquish to the ears of an older generation.

But for the rest of us who dig either ska, folk or funk, this CD is sprinkled with a bit of it all.

Anger rises when her new father kicks the friends out of the house. The rest of the play is one amusing interlude after another, while the over-zealous father attempts to teach the kids responsibility.

Adding personality to the show is the out-of-town nephew (Kam Brian). His constant comparison of the children to ranch animals evokes the outrage of Nedra. But his good looks swoon her two giddy friends.

The production is purposely corny and succeeds in its attempt to go all out wild with '70s fashions.

There is no pretense that the show is to be taken seriously. The result is a joyful presentation that ends quite abruptly.

Just like all sitcoms, the happy ending is achieved within five minutes.

Watching a self-proclaimed silly show takes pressure off the audience. I sat back and took it for what it was: corny yet successful.

"Five on a Honeymoon" shows through March 29.

It plays Monday, Friday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. Beginning March 13 it will run nightly. Tickets are $7 on Mondays, $8 on weeknights and matinees and $10 weekends. Hale Center Theater is at 225 W. 400 North, Orem. For tickets, call 226-8600.

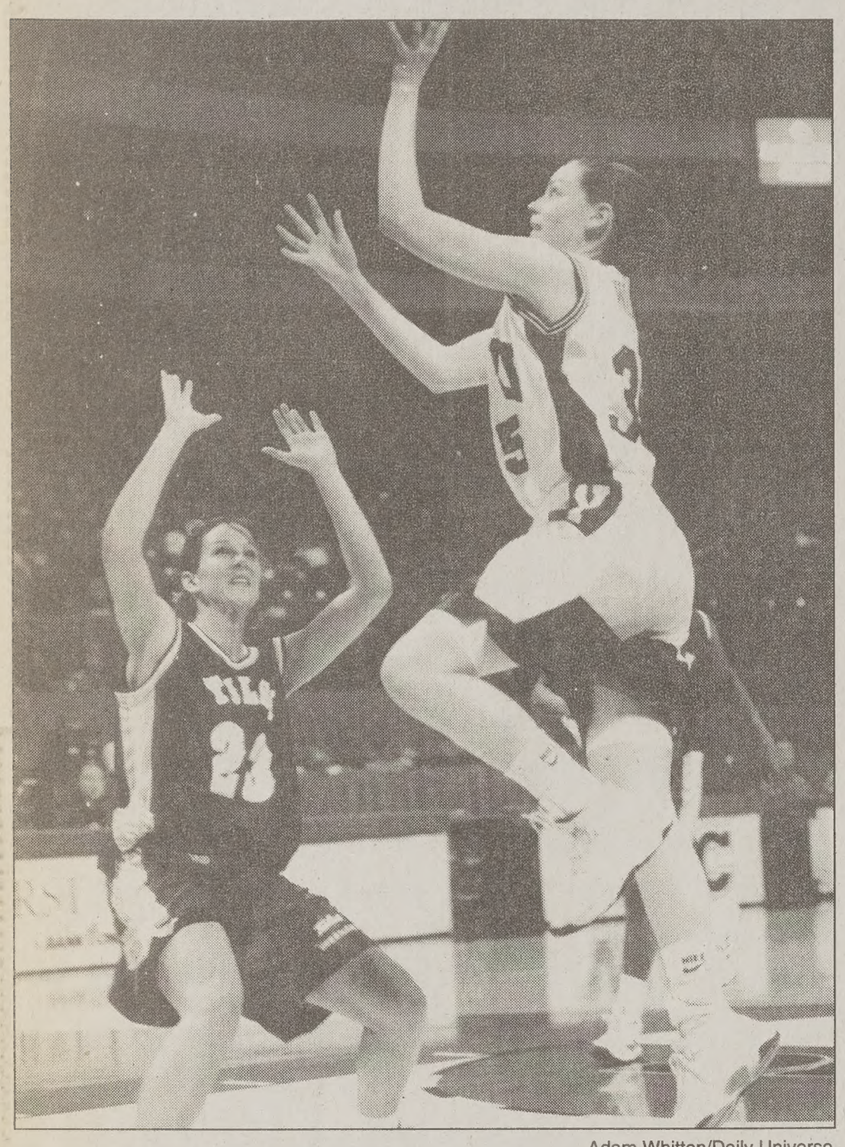
1 down, 2 to go; Women shoot for final round



Adam Whitten/Daily Universe

Cougar stand-out Cady Williams goes up for a basket during BYU's win over Tulsa at the Thomas & Mack Center in Las Vegas on Monday.

Cougars face tough road to second round

By CLAIRISSA PETT
clairissa@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

LAS VEGAS — If history repeats itself, the BYU women's basketball team has a beautifully scripted future ahead.

Last year, the Cougars entered the WAC Tournament as a lowly fifth seed in the Mountain Division and defeated No. 1 seed Utah in the quarterfinals for a huge 66-58 upset. This year the story is along very similar lines.

After a 78-59 thwarting of the Tulsa Golden Hurricane on Monday, BYU advances to the quarterfinal round of the WAC Tournament against No. 2 Southern Methodist today at 1 p.m. at the Thomas & Mack Center in Las Vegas.

The Cougars (16-11, 9-5) are no strangers to overthrowing the favorites. Since 1997, BYU has pulled out three upsets in the WAC Tournament.

But if BYU intends on running the miracle mile this time, it must overcome a sizzling SMU team, which is both very rested and very victory-minded. The Mustangs won their last four regular season games, including nine of their last 10. And after receiving a first-round bye, they haven't had to take the court since last Saturday.

"They're playing with great momentum," coach Trent Shippen said. "SMU is as good a team as any in the conference."

After a tough preseason schedule that left the Mustangs 16-10 overall, the team had much more success in the conference in which they finished 11-3. Their only losses came from the fourth ranked team in the nation, Colorado State and an overtime nail-biter to UNLV.

Against BYU, the Mustangs have won all three meetings between the two teams, including two meetings last season that SMU won by a 19-point margin.

Quiet star leads Cougars

At least that's the philosophy of BYU-star women's basketball player Cady Williams. Once again she was near the top of the scoring column — 14 points to be exact — after BYU's 78-59 opening-round win over Tulsa in the WAC Tournament.

Adam Whitten
Universe Sports Editor

And once again there was Williams, deflecting the credit onto someone else.

At postseason tournaments, the top performers of the given game are brought into a media room where they sit in front of the media on a pedestal and in front of microphones. After Monday's win, about 10-15 questions were asked to BYU head coach Trent Shippen, senior guard Amanda Covington and Williams.

Williams never would have said anything had it not been for an insistent Shippen. Shippen says Williams has never been one to take credit for her talents.

Shippen said that, at the beginning of the year, he gave each woman an information card to fill out for the season's media guide. He said Williams didn't even put down that she was a first team All-American selection at Ricks College last season.

"That right there tells you a little bit about Cady Williams," Shippen said.

Williams was a freshman in Shippen's last season coaching at Ricks.

"Cady is consistent, hard working, positive and a great leader," Covington said. "She only says what needs to be said."

That's something BYU has needed this year. BYU lost guard Kari Gallup and forward Barbie Carmichael to graduation. Those two players combined to average close to 30 points per game last season.

For the season, Williams was BYU's leading scorer averaging 12.9 points per game.

So why is she so quiet? Covington said she lets her actions say what needs to be said.

"She just leads by example," Covington said.

Williams just smiled when she was asked why she was so quiet on and off the court.

"I'm pretty intense," Williams said. "I've just always been quiet."

So you don't have to showboat, yell or scream?

Williams, blushing at the thought of the question, simply said, "No."

Well spoken, Cady. That's all that needs to be said.

Most players pointed to the second half, particularly the playoffs, as standout moments of the year.

"The highlight of the season was just how we played in the playoffs," Harris said. "We just dominated USU. It was really just beating everybody's prejudgments — the fans, the refs, the people who organize the league, the people who do the rankings."

The IceCats will experience turnover next season once again due primarily to LDS missions, but will retain most of their core group of players. One notable exception, however, is the departure of left-winger Garth Evans, who finished up his five-year eligibility this season.

"Our main core of the team is coming back, but losing Garth is going to hurt both in terms of organization and leadership," Edgson said. "He's given a lot to the team and we've benefited a lot from having him. It's going to leave a big hole. Someone's going to have to step up and fill that hole."

An overwhelming feeling on the IceCats is gratitude toward the fans, who dealt with occasional delays and less-than-ideal seating circumstances due to construction on the Seven Peaks Arena for the 2002 Olympics.

"I'm grateful to everyone who took the time to come out and watch us," Tylor Harris said. "It made me feel good to go out on the ice and have everyone support us."

Bart Harris echoed his brother's sentiments.

"We appreciate all the fans coming out," he said. "They're definitely some of the best, pretty much positive and just good fans."

The IceCats will resume play in October.

Gymnastics team stumbles, falls for second time to Aggies

By ALYSHA BAXLEY
alysha@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Natalie Broekman, Hillary Johnson and Kim Little took first, fifth and sixth respectively in the all-around competition Tuesday, but it wasn't enough to put the BYU women's gymnastics team above Utah State.

BYU scored its highest finish of the season but still fell to the Aggies 195.475 - 193.975.

Broekman scored a 39.075, even though she wasn't supposed to compete in the all-around. Broekman has been out of the all-around line-up since the beginning of the season due to injury. She was put back on beam and bars on Feb. 19 against Utah State in Provo and back on all four events last night.

Head coach Brad Cattermole said Broekman had to step up after all-arounder Angie Hickman injured her leg and had to withdraw from competition during the meet.

"We weren't expecting her to be on floor yet," Cattermole said. "Natalie is doing well. She went up because we had to have her, and Natalie is back."

On floor, Little scored a season high of 9.875, taking second in the event. She was followed by Jeni Thomas and Erin Johansen, both with scores 9.775. Johansen set a new career best on the event.

On beam, Broekman and Little dominated with a pair of 9.85s. On bars Broekman led with another 9.85.

On vault, normally the Cougars' strongest event, the Cougars fell too many times to make it happen.

Cattermole said the team fell too many times on an event where there should have been no falls.

"We need to not fall anymore," Cattermole said. "It's getting into the season and we're still making stupid mistakes. Hopefully we'll stop doing that soon."

Cattermole said the team will continue to work on sticking its routines, but doesn't know what else it can do.

"Utah State beat us," Cattermole said. "We can beat them, we just kept falling and we need to stop it."

The women will team up with the men's team for a dual meet against the University of Nebraska on Saturday at 7 p.m. in the Smith Fieldhouse.

Tennis falls hard in No. Carolina

NewsNet Services

The BYU women's tennis team was roughed up on its recent trip back east, losing all four dual matches against the University of North Carolina, Tennessee, Duke and Clemson in North Carolina.

The Cougars almost pulled off a win against Clemson, only to lose 5-4.

Gee Gee Garvin, Jodi Richardson and Tara Ferguson all won their singles' matches, giving the Cougars a 3-3 tie after singles' play.

However, only BYU's Brooke Leavens and Kim Kelly combined for a win in doubles, beating Catherine Galvin and Christina Oldock 8-3.

According to head coach Clark Barton, the team needs to take advantage of good singles' play.

"We've gotten off to slow starts in our doubles matches and we need to pick up right off from our singles matches," Barton said.

Carbon monoxide: A quiet killer

UT. family poisoned

By KRISTIN TENNEY
kristin@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

A new gas furnace caused a carbon monoxide poisoning that sent a Springville couple and their twin daughters to the hospital Monday, police say.

John Stewart, 33, his wife, Lisa, 29, and their two daughters, Kourtney and Kaylin, 3, were found unconscious at their home Monday at 12:28 p.m., Lt. Oliver Nielsen said.

The family, which lives at 161 E. 100 North in Springville, was taken to Utah Valley Medical Center ,and from there the twins were life-flighted to Primary Children's Hospital.

"It is really hard to discuss the tragedy because I know this family," Nielsen said. "The twins are adorable little girls and Lisa is expecting another child. I hope and pray everything turns out all right."

Lisa and one of the twins regained consciousness for a moment on Monday, but then they both slipped back into deep comas and critical condition, Nielsen said.

Lt. David Caron reported that the family had not improved at all by Tuesday morning.

The Stewarts' new gas furnace, installed by Questar, has been determined to be the cause of the poisoning, Nielsen said.

"The furnace's flue pipe was disconnected and it pumped 100 percent of the carbon monoxide into the home," he said.

"We are not sure how long exactly the Stewarts were exposed to the poisoning, and we do not know if they had noticed any symptoms before retiring to bed Sunday night," Nielsen said. "It isn't looking good for the family at this point," Caron said.

Gas accidents are preventable

NewsNet Services

Hundreds die each year from accidental carbon monoxide poisoning, according to a report by the Carbon Monoxide Coalition.

Carbon monoxide is an odorless, colorless gas created whenever a fuel such as gasoline is burning. Carbon monoxide detectors can help alert homeowners to increased levels of the gas, but the coalition says people should not feel like the detectors are foolproof.

If household members complain of headaches, dizziness, weakness or nausea, there is a good chance they could be exposed to carbon monoxide, reports the Air Conditioning Contractors of America.

Other symptoms include a rapid heart beat, seizure, loss of hearing, blurry vision and vomiting. Long exposure to carbon monoxide can result in loss of consciousness, cardiac arrest, respiratory failure, coma and death.

The Springville Police Department urges anyone who suspects a problem with a furnace to call the gas company to have it inspected. Those who notice any symptoms of poisoning should evacuate the home and immediately call the police department or 911.

Airline's attendants may strike

By EMMA HERNANDEZ
emma@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

America West Airlines flight attendants are threatening to strike if salaries don't go up by March 20.

"There's a huge disparity between other airlines' salaries and ours," said Scott Ramsey, vice president of the Association of Flight Attendants for Local Council 66.

Ramsey said flight attendants are willing to negotiate with America West if they come to a fair agreement on salaries.

"America West needs to come up with more money. If they don't, we will definitely go on strike," Ramsey said.

America West and the Union of Flight Attendants are on a 30-day cool-off period that will delay action until Mar. 20.

The cool-off period began Feb. 17 and is the result of an impasse made created by the National Mediation Board.

Ramsey said flight attendants and America West have been having contract talks for more than four years. The impasse is meant to give both parties time to negotiate without engaging in self-help.

If an agreement isn't worked out, Ramsey said, the Union of Flight Attendants plans on using an unannounced, non-traditional strike method called CHAOS (Create havoc around our system).

"CHAOS can last indefinitely because flight attendants are still getting income while hitting the company hard," said Ramsey.

Patty Noak, a spokesperson for America West, said action by flight attendants will not significantly affect passengers.

If negotiations fail, the Union of Flight Attendants is free to engage in self-help starting March 20 at midnight.

America West has five daily flights from Phoenix to Salt Lake City, but Salt Lake airport officials said they are not concerned about a possible strike.

An excerpt from The Gettysburg Address:

"...But in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living rather to be dedicated to the great task remaining before us — that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion — that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Reading day celebrated

Lindon Elementary principal shares stories with students

By MIKI MEEK
miki@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

As Gov. Mike Leavitt signed a proclamation declaring Tuesday Read Across America Day in Utah, a Lindon Elementary Principal traveled around his school promoting the day with a skateboard under his feet and a book in his hand.

Principal Rod Tucker helped celebrate the day by going to each class and sharing a story. For the occasion he traded in his usual shirt and tie for an orange life preserver, blue mesh shorts and snow boots. Tucker said the weird outfit tied in with his story's theme and showed that reading can be fun.

"I think if students learn to love reading they will also be able to enjoy school," he said.

Read Across America began in connection with the March 2 birthday of the late author Theodor Seuss Geisel, better known as Dr. Seuss.

"Dr. Seuss is the pioneer of children's books. He created books that children could actually read and enjoy," said first-grade teacher Janis Clouse, while 23 of her students sat bunched together on the carpet listening attentively to Tucker.

Clouse said a celebration of reading takes place at Lindon Elementary every day. The school constantly encourages its students to read because it helps them develop proper writing and speaking skills.

"You can do anything if you read," Clouse said.

Venice Michaelis, a teacher at Lindon Elementary, specializes in helping students individually with their reading skills. She said children should spend 15 to 20 minutes each day reading. Michealis also said parents need to take an active role in their children's reading.

National Education Association President Bob Chase agrees.

"It's absolutely crucial that youngsters be given a foundation in reading if they're going to make progress in education ... that means a real strong commitment from parents," Chase said.

State Capitol houses children's reading program

By HOLLY R. HANSEN
hansen@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The second annual Read Across America program was kicked off in Utah on Tuesday with a green eggs and ham breakfast at the state capital.

The Utah Education Association sponsored the event on the birthday of famed children's author, Theodor Geisel, better known as Dr. Seuss, to promote a life-long love for reading.

"Reading is the most fundamental of all skills," said UEA President, Phyllis Sorensen. "If you can't read you can't do your math, you can't learn."

Seuss' "Cat In The Hat," graced the capitol's halls, as legislators and local celebrities read to 500 Utah school children camped out in tents inside the rotunda.

Richard Paul Evans, author of "The Christmas Box," said reading is the start to learning how to communicate.

Evans said children are sometimes enticed away from books by television and video games.

"Things in the media are often so dynamic, it draws their attention away. Reading needs to be presented by us and by educators as being something very dynamic."

Shirley Foerster, fourth-grade teacher at Brookwood Elementary in the Jordon School District, agrees that books need to become an important part of all of our lives.

"One of the best ways to get a child to read is by being a good example and reading yourself," she said

Parent Jennifer Koplin of Sandy reads to her two children regularly at home.

Koplin said her son appreciates her efforts and enjoys reading more.

"I'm amazed at how it really calms everything down in the whole house," Koplin said.

For the first time in history, the House was adjourned 15 minutes early so legislators could read to children on the House floor.

Poison prevention is a Utah priority

The Utah Safety Council has designated March as Poison Prevention Month to help raise awareness and prevent childhood poisoning.

More than a million unintentional poisonings among children five years old and younger were reported to U.S. poison control centers during 1997.

Utah Safety Council President Robert Parenti said children are at a higher risk for poisoning than adults because they are smaller, have faster metabolic rates and are less able to physically handle toxic chemicals. He also said children's natural curiosity and desire to put everything in their mouths increases their poisoning risk.

Parenti said parents or caregivers should post telephone numbers for the Poison Control Center, the local emergency room and pediatricians near the phone in case of an emergency.

He recommended that parents buy products with child-resistant closures and then keep the products in original containers while storing them in safe areas.

Brad Dahl, assistant director at the Utah Poison Control Center, said a lot of the instructions on the back of cleaning products are wrong, so it is important to call the poison control center immediately after a chemical is ingested.

When phoning for help, Dahl said parents should have the poison container on hand and be able to tell poison control personnel the child's age, weight, any health problems, what first aid has been administered and if the child has vomited.

The University of Utah Hospital Poison Control Center 24-hour hotline phone number is 1-800-456-7707.

UVRMC aims to keep babies safe

CNA Janell Kallas towels off a newborn after a bath at the Utah Valley Regional Medical Center nursery Saturday. Directors at the center said its programs protect babies from being switched or stolen.

Baby switching has made national news in the last few months, but Utah Valley Regional Medical Center officials said they do not foresee any problems.

Of the 7,000 births per year at the three Intermountain Health Care hospitals in Utah Valley, no baby-switching cases have been reported, said Brian Andreason, director of safety and security at the center.

"It's a total effort — everyone is involved," Andreason said.

He said the hospital is constantly reviewing its policies and procedures for baby safety, especially when there is an indication that there may be a weakness, deficiency or an area where the center needs to improve.

One element he emphasizes is the education process that goes on between the nursing staff and the parents-to-be. Parents are educated on what hospital processes are, what the processes would be in the event of a security failure, what would be suspicious, and what parents should be lookout for.

"We're very concerned about our newborns and parents," Andreason said.

He said the security team at the center is eager to see what the investigations of baby-switching cases in other parts of the country will find.

Andreason's team will look at what happened in other baby-switching situations to ensure that the same types of potential problems do not occur at the center.

"The security measures are continually reviewed because it's so important," said DeeAnn Mitchell, neonatal manager at the center.

She explained several procedures the center has to ensure newborn safety. First, when the baby is born, several identification bands are placed on the infant. These match identification bands on the mother and her significant other.

One identification band goes on the baby's arm, Mitchell said, one goes on the ankle, one on the mother's wrist and one on the wrist of her significant other.

Second, the labor and delivery nurse reviews with the mother various infant-safety procedures and other things she needs to be aware of while her baby is in the hospital, Mitchell said.

There is a form that the mother reviews, the nurse then reviews the form with the mother and the mother signs the form to indicate she understands the information. Mitchell said a sign with the information is also on a bulletin board in the mother's room.

"Basically, it's information the mother needs to know: do not leave the baby unattended, only someone with an identification band can get the baby from the nursery," Mitchell said.

Finally, Mitchell said, there is a form that is filled out when the mother is discharged from the hospital. The nurse checks the baby's identification band against the identification band of the mother to make sure the right baby goes home with the right mom.

"If there's a breakdown somewhere in that cycle, there's a possibility of something like (a baby switching) happening," Mitchell said.
